They, the Grangers, make no war on other industries. They look to the development of the agricultural interests of the country, claiming for their vocation that it is the grandest, the most important and most independent of all other pursuits. The Grange is not, as some follow other occupations. It does seem to me that all farmers and laborers ought to rally to the Grange to protect their rights, for in union there is strength. Appropos to this same subject, we consumption of smoke in London:

"A few years ago the City of London was as sooty and smoky as the crater of Mauna Loa. To-day, by the energetic action of her authorities, her atmosphere has been purified to the highest degree attainable by human skill. Her climate, especially in the winter, is moist, cloudy, and foggy, so that the sun is seldom seen between the months of November and April. The difficulties she has to contends against in dealing with the smoke-nuisance are thus greatly aggravated. They may be set down, in fact, as five to one in comparison with those of Chicago, where a clear sky and brisk winds almost always prevail. Nevertheless, the perseverance of the London authorities in dealing with smoke and soot has been such that from April to October there is no more discoloration of the atmosphere in any part of the active than in retied in the natural. It is strictly a farmer's organization for self improvement and self help, antagonizing no legitimate industry, but prepared to oppose and crush all combinations, rings, and corners that are against the producer. Its objects are to bring the producer and consumer to a nearer relationship with each other; that is to trade more directly and thus set aside the worthless middle man to a great extent, and by this model the condition of both will be bettered.
